Commitment to Ethical Persuasion:

The Foundation enrolls all religious or ideological groups to adopt a commitment to only employ ethical means of persuasion when advocating their respective beliefs or practices. The following is the declaration of commitment that establishes those ethical standards for honorable religious, ideological, or cultural diplomacy:

A DECLARATION OF COMMITMENT TO PROMOTE AND DEFEND OUR CONVICTIONS ONLY BY RESPECTFUL PERSUASION

We, the members, and friends of the Foundation for Religious Diplomacy, although holding different religious allegiances and worldviews, join together in this solemn declaration:

We believe that all people have the power to influence others and are responsible to use their influence in good conscience to improve the world.

We acknowledge that people of integrity, intelligence, and good will hold substantially different religious convictions or world views, and that these differences — which are often not resolvable even through better education and understanding — can lead to sincere conflicts over what is best for the world.

We affirm the prerogative of persons and groups to attempt to influence others to adopt or resist different religious allegiances or world views, provided they do so only through honest, respectful persuasion without coercion or threat of harmful injury to others.

We commit ourselves, and vigorously encourage all people, to engage in honest, respectful conversations that allow for mutual understanding and persuasion as we promote and defend our religious or ideological convictions.

We denounce any human threats of harmful injury, acts of coercion or violence to influence another's conscience, religious allegiance, or worldview.
